ABSTRACT

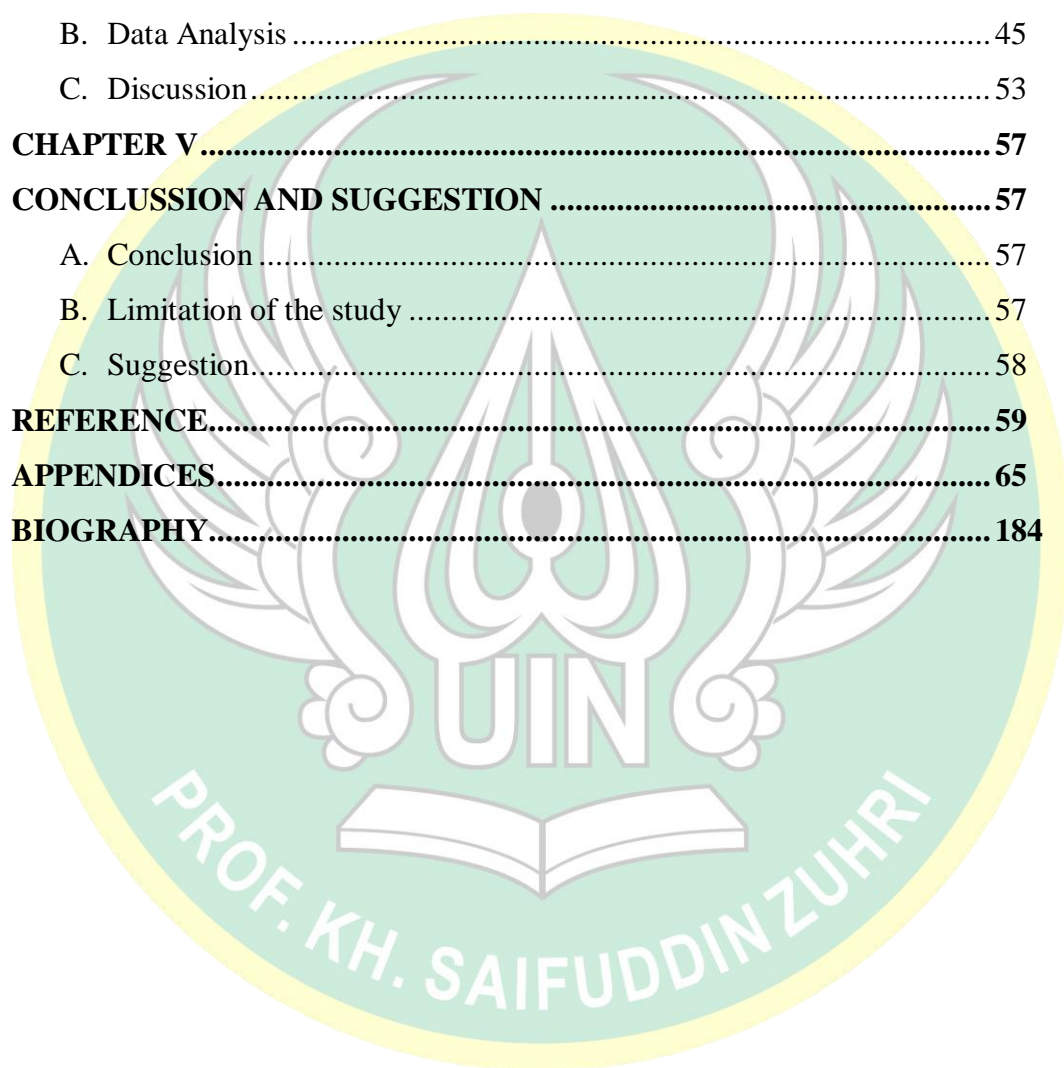

This study aims to determine the effect of using the STAD learning method on reading comprehension skills of students in grade VIII SMP N 9 Purwokerto. This study used quantitative research method with quasi experimental design. The population of this study amounted to 284 students. Sampling was done by simple random sampling and the sample taken was 70 students. Class 8 F as the experimental class and class 8 C as the control class. Data collection used pre-test and post-test instruments in the form of multiple choice of 40 questions. The results showed that the average value of the pre-test score in the experimental class was 47.85 and the average value of the post-test was 75.92. The value in the control class for the pre-test average was 46.85 and for the post-test average value was 62.78. The results of hypothesis testing using independent sample t-test showed a significant difference in post-test scores between the experimental and control classes with a sig (2-tailed) value of $0.000 < 0.005$. It can be concluded that the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) effectively improves reading comprehension in class VIII students of SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

This chapter explains background of study, conceptual definition, research question, objective and significances of the research, and structure of the paper.

A. Background of Study

Reading is one of the English language skills that is considered important for students' growth as individuals in various aspects of life (Muliana, 2020). Furthermore, reading comprehension is the ability to comprehend, analyze, and interpret texts read, as well as integrate information from various sources (Woolley, 2019). Reading comprehension involves complex cognitive processes, including decoding, word comprehension, background knowledge, and inferential reasoning (Cairns & Adams, 1991). In the context of education, reading comprehension is very important because it affects students' academic achievement in various subjects (Snow, 2002). Therefore, there is a positive correlation between reading ability and general academic success (Torgesen & Hudson, 2006).

Reading comprehension is one of the difficult topics for second language learners, including English learners (Grabe & Stoller, 2020). For instance, many students struggle with understanding complex reading texts, such as articles and short stories (Widyastuti, 2021). While many students can read these texts fluently, they often find it challenging to grasp the meaning, context, and messages contained within them (Sahmadan & Ajam, 2020). This difficulty is reflected in their low ability to identify main ideas, draw conclusions, and interpret the content of the texts (Dwiningtiyas et al., 2020). As a result, students frequently absorb only limited information and are unable to make deeper inferences or deductions from the readings (Wahyudi & Firmansyah, 2023). Furthermore, students who struggle to identify important information or draw conclusions often feel less motivated and less interested in reading (Antoro, 2017).

In order to solve this issue and encourage students to improve their reading comprehension skills, it is essential to implement effective teaching approaches. Specifically, teachers should use reading comprehension strategies that have been proven to help students understand texts better (Klingner & Vaughn, 1998). Moreover, to enhance students' motivation in learning the target language, teachers can provide appropriate learning materials, strategies, or teaching methods that facilitate the learning process (Dwinalida & Setiaji, 2020). In addition, employing various instructional strategies, such as cooperative learning and interactive discussions, can engage students more actively in the reading process. This approach not only enhances comprehension but also creates a collaborative learning environment where students can share insights and perspectives (Johnson & Johnson, 2017). Therefore, effective teaching strategies are crucial for developing students' reading skills.

The Student Teams Achievement Divisions (STAD) model is one of the various innovative methods for enhancing reading comprehension that may be applied to include students in the educational process and increase their comprehension of reading materials (Serjali & Halim, 2020). This strategy provides a cooperative learning approach where students work in small groups to help each other understand the text (Johnson & Johnson, 2009). In this way, students not only learn independently but also collaborate in discussing and analyzing the reading, thereby enhancing their understanding (Kagan, 2013). The advantage of STAD lies in its ability to enhance student motivation, as they feel more engaged and have a sense of responsibility towards the group's success (Slavin, 2011). Furthermore, this learning strategy encourages social interaction that strengthens skills and cooperation among students (Nurjanah, 2022).

Several previous studies have discussed the use of STAD as a learning method that aids English language learning. Research conducted by Raihan & Zaki (2023), indicates that the implementation of the STAD (Student Teams-Achievement Divisions) model positively affects students' motivation in learning and enhances their speaking skills. Additionally, findings from Albiansyah and Hardiyanti (2021), indicate that the interactive activities incorporated within the STAD framework not only increase student interest but also facilitate deeper engagement with English learning materials. Therefore, the STAD model proves to be effective in enhancing speaking abilities while also capturing students' attention and creating a more dynamic learning environment.

Based on this context, this research focuses on the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) to improve students' reading comprehension. The use of co-operative learning methods such as Student Teams Achievement Division (STAD) has been an interesting subject of research in the context of teaching reading in schools. STAD is designed to enhance collaboration between students in achieving specific learning objectives, including text comprehension and overall reading ability. This research investigated the effectiveness of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on students' reading comprehension. The findings from this research are used as a guideline for other schools to develop teaching with various strategies. Therefore, the researcher conducted a research entitled “The Effectiveness of Using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on Student’s Reading Comprehension at 8th Grade of SMPN 9 Purwokerto”.

B. Operational Definition

In order to limit the study and to make it easy in searching the data there is some term that able to describe as follows:

1. Reading Comprehension

Reading is the process of associating the reader's background knowledge with information in the text in order to comprehend the meaning of the text (Sabiq & Ardiana, 2020). Comprehension is the interpretation of information in a text, the use of prior knowledge to interpret the information presented. It creates a clear picture in the reader's mind of the content of the text (Smith, 2012). Reading comprehension is the process of simultaneously extracting and constructing meaning through interaction and involvement with written language (Snow, 2002). Readers will gain information or knowledge from the text after they read. Therefore that they understand the information from a text.

According to Elleman & Oslund (2019), reading comprehension is the result of complex interplay between the text's qualities and what readers contribute to the reading experience. Meanwhile, Klingner and Vaugh (1998) define reading comprehension as the act of creating meaning through the coordination of a number of complicated processes such as world knowledge, and fluency. Reading comprehension can be defined as the process by which the reader separates linguistic signals and reconstructs them into a meaningful whole as intended by the author.

2. Student Team Achievement Division (STAD)

The term "Student Team Achievement Division" (STAD) refers to a cooperative learning strategy developed by Slavin and his colleagues (1995). Cooperative learning methods are a very effective and enjoyable way of boosting the achievement of learners as a whole, not just individually (Slavin, 2015). According to Johnson and Johnson (2013), the goals of cooperative learning techniques like STAD are to promote constructive interdependence, personal responsibility, direct promotional engagement, appropriate use of social skills, and group processing. It emphasizes individual accountability within a supportive team structure, aiming to foster both collaborative skills and individual mastery of academic content (Gillies, 2016).

Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) cooperative learning model is the simplest type of cooperative learning, and is suitable for teachers who are just starting to use cooperative learning (Slavin, 2015). Students are placed in learning teams of four or five who are mixed according to performance level, gender and ethnicity (Johnson & Johnson, 2013). In STAD, the teacher first presents the lesson, and then students work together in their teams to help one another learn the material (Kagan & Kagan, 2009). At the end of the lesson, all students are quizzed on the material, but they are not allowed to help each other during the quiz (Slavin, 2015).

C. Research Question

Based on the background of the problem above, the research question in this research is " Is the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) effective on reading comprehension skill at 8th grade of SMP N 9 Purwokerto? "

D. Objective and Significant of the Research

The objective and significance of the research can be described as follows :

1. Objective of the research

Based on the research question, the objective of this research is to measure the effectiveness of using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) strategy on students reading comprehension skill at 8th grade of SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

2. Significance of The Research

The significance of the research is intended to provide benefits and knowledge. Hopefully, this study will be able to:

a. Theoretical

This study has theoretical benefits, such as being able to provide new perspectives for teachers and other researchers regarding the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) as a teaching approach to improve students' abilities.

b. Practical

This research has practical significance as follows:

1) For the Teachers

This research enriches knowledge and provides many references for English teachers in using some strategies in teaching reading. This research is also expected to motivate teachers to improve the teaching and learning process through the use of learning strategies that can encourage students to be more active and participate in learning.

2) For the School

This research is expected to provide some information and contribute in teaching reading at SPM 9 Purwokerto. The research findings on the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) in this school can be used to improve educational quality and to enhance teachers' teaching and learning processes.

3) For the Others Researchers

The findings of this study are expected to contribute to the advancement of knowledge, especially those directly related to the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) strategies in learning. This study is also expected to inspire other researchers to conduct similar research or even further research related to the teaching of reading comprehension.

E. Structure of the Research

The research structure is a framework for conducting research that provides guidance on the topics to be discussed. This research's systematic writing is divided into five chapters, each of which includes the following information:

Chapter I, is the introduction. It comprises the research background, conceptual definitions, research questions, research objectives and significance, and writing systematics.

Chapter II, is the theoretical frameworks. This chapter explains the theories used in this study including theories about reading comprehension and Student Team Achievement Division (STAD).

Chapter III, is the methodology. This chapter discusses the type of research, place and time of research, population and research sample, variables and research indicators, data collection techniques, and data analysis techniques.

Chapter IV, is the research results. This chapter includes presentation and analysis of research.

Chapter V, is the conclusions and suggestions. This chapter contains conclusions, research limitations, and suggestions.

CHAPTER II

LITERATURE REVIEW

This chapter explains the definition and theories related to the research and the variables of this research. Other theoretical sources are needed to support this research, besides that some previous of the research will be explained in this section.

A. Theoretical Framework

1. Reading Comprehension

a. Definition of Reading

Reading is an interactive process between the reader, text, and context that involves cognitive and metacognitive activities to understand the meaning of a text (Snow, 2002). Reading as a complex process that includes the ability to understand, interpret, and use the information contained in the text, both literally and inferentially (Guthrie & Klauda, 2014). Reading is a constructive process in which the reader interacts with the text to construct meaning (Anderson et al., 1985). In addition, Oakhill et al., (2014), explained that reading is a process that involves comprehension, interpretation, and reflection on the text. From these various definitions, it can be concluded that reading is a complex process that not only involves decoding skills, but also the ability to understand, interpret, and use the information contained in the text effectively.

b. Definition of Reading Comprehension

Reading comprehension is the ability to understand and interpret the text read (Snow, 2002). This process involves word recognition, understanding of meaning, and the ability to connect new information with existing knowledge (Pressley, 2006). According to Kintsch (2003), reading comprehension does not only depend on decoding skills, but also requires critical and analytical thinking skills that enable readers to evaluate and respond to information. Effective readers can capture the main idea, make inferences, and summarize information, so reading comprehension is a great help for academic success (Duke & Pearson, 2009).

c. The Importance of Reading Comprehension

Reading is one of the most important skills that must be mastered by junior high school students. (Sabiq, 2017). Reading comprehension is a crucial basic skill in education and students' daily lives (Snow, 2002). The ability to comprehend text well directly affects students' academic success in various subjects, as much of the learning material is delivered through reading (Duke & Pearson, 2009). In addition, good reading comprehension also enables individuals to participate in an increasingly complex society, where information is often conveyed in the form of text (Kintsch, 2003). Therefore, the development of reading comprehension should be the main focus of literacy instruction at all levels of education.

The main purpose of reading class is to provide students with opportunities to learn from various English-language sources (Mualim & Aziez, 2020). In this context, teachers can implement effective learning strategies to improve students' reading comprehension (Kusumawanti & Bharati, 2018). When students develop strong reading comprehension skills, they will be better able to build arguments, make decisions, and understand others' points of view (Oakhill et al., 2014). Thus, improved reading comprehension not only contributes to students' academic success, but also prepares them to face various practical challenges in everyday life (Biancarosa & Snow, 2004).

d. Types of Reading

There are different types of reading activities, these types of reading have different objectives and approaches, but complement each other in developing comprehensive reading skills in learners (Grabe & Stoller, 2020). According to Grabe & Stoller (2020), some types of reading are as follows:

1) Oral reading

Oral reading is the process of reading text aloud that allows the reader to convey information orally to the listener. This activity not only improves reading skills but also helps in the development of speaking and listening skills. One of the important components of oral reading is fluency. In an educational context, oral reading is often used to improve students' fluency, comprehension, and engagement with reading material.

2) Silent reading

Silent reading involves not pronouncing the words aloud while concentrating on comprehending the text's meaning. This activity not only increases reading speed, but also helps readers internalize information and make connections with prior knowledge. Concentration is very important in silent reading activities so that readers can easily achieve understanding. The aim is to learn and understand the information contained in the text.

3) Reading comprehension

Reading comprehension is the process of reading a text with the intention of comprehending, analyzing, and considering its content. Reading comprehension involves a complex cognitive process, where the reader must not only recognize words, but also integrate new information with existing knowledge. Readers will make a determination to comprehend the concepts or ideas that are provided in this text. Reading comprehension abilities are crucial because they facilitate critical thinking, decision-making, and successful communication.

4) Critical reading

The goal of critical reading is to improve comprehension by the use of particular methods, models, questions, and theories. Critical reading is a more in-depth process of analyzing and evaluating a text, which allows the reader to understand not only what is written, but also how and why the author conveys the information. Reading with a critical attitude, analysing and evaluating the information, arguments and viewpoints presented in the text. The aim is to develop critical thinking skills.

5) Creative reading

Creative reading is an approach to reading that encourages readers to actively interact with the text, using their imagination and creativity. Reading with the purpose of generating new ideas, developing innovative thinking, and solving problems. Readers use imagination and creativity in understanding the text. Reading for the goal of solving issues, imaginative thinking, and idea generation. In order to comprehend the material, readers employ their ingenuity and imagination.

6) Functional reading

Functional reading refers to the reading skills needed to understand and use information in the context of daily life. Reading with a practical purpose, such as reading instructions, schedules, forms, or instructions. Reading and understanding community signs and recipes are two instances of functional reading exercises. The aim is to obtain information needed in daily life.

e. Aspect of Reading Comprehension

Reading comprehension has several aspects. Aspects of reading include various elements that contribute to overall reading comprehension. According to Grabe (2009), the aspects of reading comprehension are as follows:

1) Determining the main idea of the text

Determining the main idea of a text is an important step in reading comprehension. The main idea is the central statement or idea that explains what the author wants to convey (Duke & Pearson, 2009). To identify the main idea, readers should take several steps, such as pre-reading to recognize the general topic, reading carefully about the author's purpose, and reflecting on the information read to ensure proper understanding (Grabe, 2009). In addition, readers need to pay attention to supporting details that are relevant to the main idea, as these details provide context and strengthen understanding of the whole text.

2) Identifying Reference

References often appear in the form of pronouns, demonstratives, or possessive adjectives that refer to nouns or ideas mentioned earlier (Snow, 2002). Readers must understand the pronouns used in the text, such as singular or plural, place, person, and situations typically used in the text (Elleman & Oslund, 2019). Readers also need to pay attention to the sentence context and text structure to help identify references (Grabe, 2009). Knowing the references used in a text is very important because references are often used to avoid subject repetition.

3) Finding the Meaning of Vocabulary in Context

Finding the meaning of vocabulary in context is a crucial skill in reading comprehension that enables readers to deduce the meanings of unfamiliar words based on the surrounding text (Biemiller, 2006). This process involves using context clues, which are hints provided within the text that can help clarify the meaning of a word (Bilici & Subasi, 2022). Context clues can come in various forms, including definitions, synonyms, antonyms, examples, or descriptions that appear before or after the unfamiliar word. In addition, vocabulary mastery is very important because it can help readers in the process of learning reading comprehension.

4) Finding Factual Information

Factual information is information that is directly stated in the text (Reutzel & Cooter, 2019). Factual information includes data, statistics, names, dates, and other facts that can support the argument or idea presented by the writer (Snow, 2002). Factual information can be displayed through descriptions, dialog, and character actions that provide the context and details needed to follow the storyline (Muliana, 2020). This allows the reader to not only recognize the information presented, but also connect those details to the broader context of the reading.

5) Making inference

Inference, or the ability to draw conclusions, is a crucial aspect of reading comprehension. This process involves the reader using information implied in the text to make assumptions or judgments that are not explicitly stated (Biancarosa & Snow, 2004). In reading, readers sometimes draw conclusions about certain details (Duke & Pearson, 2009). Inference involves using clues from the text, such as dialog, descriptions, and character actions, to understand the motivations, emotions, and relationships between characters (Alpian & Yatri, 2022). The ability to make inferences not only improves text comprehension, but also enhances critical and analytical thinking skills, which are essential in analyzing and evaluating information.

f. Techniques of Reading Comprehension

The use of reading techniques can help students understand the content of the text more deeply and improve their reading comprehension skills. According to Reutzel & Cooter (2019), here are some techniques in reading comprehension:

1) Making Predictions

Predicting is a technique where the reader makes guesses about the content of the text before reading it. Looking at the title, image, and subtitle, readers can estimate what they will read. Making predictions involves using information from the text, combined with the reader's own background knowledge, to anticipate what might happen next in the text. Steps that can be taken in predicting reading include reviewing the title, subtitles, and visuals in the text being read.

2) Identifying Main Ideas

The main idea is the central, most important idea that the author wants to convey about the topic. The main idea is the core discussion of a paragraph. Usually, the main idea is found at the beginning or the end of a paragraph. Identifying main idea is an important technique in reading comprehension that helps readers recognize the core or main idea of a text. This technique involves reading carefully to find the main sentence or phrase that summarizes the essence of the text.

3) Drawing Conclusions

Drawing conclusions involves using information from the text, combined with the reader's own background knowledge, to arrive at a logical inference that is not directly stated in the text. This technique often involves analyzing characters, situations and outcomes that are not explicitly stated in the text. Readers can also write a summary of the main sentence to make it easier to draw conclusions. After that, readers can draw conclusions to connect the important points in the reading.

4) Monitoring Comprehension

Monitoring comprehension involves the reader's awareness of his or her own understanding of the text and the ability to identify when meaning breaks down. Whether or if the reader comprehends what they have read is referred to as monitoring comprehension. This can be done by looking up definitions of unfamiliar words or summarizing information in their minds. Techniques can build reflective habits that are important for long-term literacy development.

5) Explaining

Explaining is an important technique in reading comprehension that involves the reader's ability to explain information, ideas and concepts from the text clearly and in detail. By explaining the content of the text, readers can deepen their understanding. Explaining involves the reader's ability to articulate his or her understanding of the text in their own words. By explaining in their own language, readers will find it easier to grasp the content contained in the reading. In addition, explaining can also train readers to provide important insights into the text being read.

6) Generating Questions

Generating questions involves the reader's ability to create their own questions about the text, which can help deepen their understanding and engagement with the text. This technique encourages readers to think critically and analytically. Generating questions can also develop broader literacy skills. With this technique, readers can enhance their analytical abilities in reading comprehension. Readers who are trained to generate questions will be able to understand important information contained in the text.

2. Student Team Achievement Division (STAD)

a. Definition of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD)

Student Teams-Achievement Divisions (STAD) is one of the cooperative learning models developed by Robert Slavin and his colleagues at Johns Hopkins University in the 1980s (Slavin, 1995). He emphasizes that, STAD is the simplest cooperative learning model and is often used in the learning process. In the STAD model, students are divided into small groups of 4-5 members with heterogeneous abilities. Each group member is responsible for learning the material provided, helping each other understand the material, and ensuring that all group members have mastered the material.

For a more focused understanding of the method, 'Student Team Achievement Division' (STAD) is a subset of cooperative learning methods designed to improve students' social skills and academic understanding through teamwork (Kagan & Kagan, 2009). It relies on heterogeneous groups of students with varying abilities to share information and work together to complete a given task (Slavin, 1995). Each group member in STAD has an important role in the success of the group, where success is measured through individual quiz scores which are then combined into a group score.

b. Steps in the Learning Process Using STAD

According to Slavin (1995), the steps in the learning process using the Student Teams-Achievement Divisions (STAD) model are as follows:

1) The team

The first step in the STAD model is to form learning teams consisting of 4-6 students with various academic backgrounds. These teams are formed to ensure diversity, so that each student can support each other and utilize each other's expertise. The teams work together to review the teaching materials presented, engage in discussions, compare answers, and address misconceptions among group members. This collaborative strategy encourages individual and collective responsibility, ensuring that all team members have a solid understanding of the learning material.

2) The class presentation

After the teams are formed, the teacher gives instructions on the subject matter to be learned. Teaching can be done through lectures, instructional videos, discussions or demonstrations. In this stage, it is important for the teacher to convey information in a clear and interesting way, so that students can understand the concepts being taught. Students are encouraged to actively participate by asking questions and sharing opinions during the learning process.

3) Learning Activities in Teams

After the teaching, students work in teams to discuss the material they have learned. In this step, each team member has the opportunity to explain their understanding and help each other. This discussion aims to strengthen students' understanding of the material, as well as provide an opportunity for students who understand less to get help from their peers. This interaction also improves communication and collaboration skills.

4) The individual quiz

After the discussion session, students take individual assessments to gauge their understanding of the material. This assessment is usually a quiz or test designed to assess students' understanding individually. During this phase, they are not allowed to seek help from their peers. This component emphasizes individual accountability, as each student is responsible for their own learning and performance on the worksheet.

5) Calculation of Team Score

After the individual assessment, the score obtained by each team member is calculated to determine the overall team score. This team score is based on the improvement achieved by each member compared to their previous performance. In this way, students are motivated to help each other, as their success as a team depends on each individual's progress.

6) Team Recognition

The final step is to award the teams that achieve the best results based on the calculated scores. These awards can be in the form of praise, certificates or small prizes. Awards not only serve as motivation, but also strengthen the sense of community and cooperation among team members.

c. Advantages and Disadvantages of the STAD

The following are the advantages and disadvantages of the STAD (Student Teams-Achievement Divisions) cooperative learning model:

1) Advantages of STAD

According to Perwitasari et al., (2018), the following are some of the advantages of STAD strategies:

- a) It can increase cooperation and interaction between students in the group.
- b) It can increase students' sense of responsibility for their own learning and team learning.
- c) It can improve student achievement, because students learn not only for themselves but are also responsible for the learning of their group members.
- d) It can encourage students to be actively involved in the learning process.
- e) The STAD strategy provides group rewards based on the improved performance of each group member, thus motivating students to help each other.

2) Disadvantages of STAD

According to Chotimah, & Rukmini (2017), the following are some of the disadvantages of STAD strategies:

- a) It takes a long time to prepare and implement.
- b) It is possible that not all students enjoy working in groups.
- c) It is not easy to assess the individual contribution of students in the group.
- d) The learning process with the STAD model may require more time than other methods.
- e) In the STAD strategy, teachers must prepare everything from materials, media, worksheets, and others carefully.

B. Previous Studies

There are relevant previous studies to show the originality of this research. Many researchers have conducted research in the field of improving reading comprehension by using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD). The first research came from Damaik & Handayani (2023), with the title “The Implementation of Student Teams Achievement Division (STAD) Technique To Improve Student’s Reading Comprehension”. The focus of this study is to solve students' problems in reading comprehension by applying the STAD technique. This thesis used quantitative descriptive method with descriptive study design, to describe the implementation of STAD technique in reading comprehension. To collect the data, the researcher implemented STAD technique in the class through the process, then, giving the test to see the students’ achievement. The last was giving the questionnaire to see the students’ response towards the implementation of STAD technique. Based on the research finding, it states that the Student Teams Achievement Division (STAD) technique was implemented well in teaching learning process from teaching materials, assigning students to teams, determining base score and team building.

The similarity between previous research and this research is using the STAD strategy. The method used for the previous study was descriptive quantitative, while this study used quasi-experiment. The purpose of the previous study was to solve students' problems in reading comprehension by applying the STAD technique. While this study aims to measure the effectiveness of using STAD strategy in reading comprehension.

The second research was conducted by Raihan & Zaki (2023), with the title “The Implementation of STAD Implementing Student Teams Achievement Divisions (STAD) for Increasing Students’ Speaking Skill”. The purpose of this study was to investigate the impact of the STAD technique in improving students' speaking skill in grade 9 of the second semester in one of school in Southern Thailand. The method used in this research is classroom action research (CAR). The findings of the study revealed that the use of STAD has impacted on students' motivation towards learning and improved their speaking ability. A comparison of the pre-test and post-test results demonstrated that the average score in the post-test was higher than in the pre-test.

The previous research and this research have the same methodology, namely STAD. The method used for that study was CAR while this study used quasi-experimentation. The purpose of the previous study was to determine the impact of the STAD technique in improving students' speaking skills. Whereas, this study aims to measure the effectiveness of using STAD strategy in learning reading comprehension in class VIII SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

Then the other research was conducted by Albiansyah & Hardiyanti (2021), with title "A Correlational Study Investigating Students' Activities in STAD Model and Their Interest in Learning English". The purpose of this study was to find out the significant correlation between students' activity in STAD model and their interest in learning English. This study was a correlational study designed to determine whether and how a set of variables had related to each other. The instruments used in this study were observation sheet and questionnaire. The null hypothesis was rejected because r table is lower than r observation whether at 5% (0,279) or at 1 % (0,361) level of significance, meaning that there was a significant correlation between students' activities in STAD model and their interest in learning English. So, it can be concluded that activities in STAD model can influence students' interest because, in STAD model, students can learn the English learning material better.

The similarities in the previous study and the current study focus on the STAD model. However, they differ in approach and purpose. While Albiansyah & Hardiyanti examined the correlation between students' activities in the STAD model and their interest in learning English, this study used an experimental design to assess the effectiveness of STAD in improving reading comprehension. The two studies provide valuable insights into the application of the STAD model, but this study provides a more direct assessment of its impact on reading ability.

C. Hypothesis

The research hypothesis used in this study relates to the effectiveness of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on students' reading comprehension.

1. Null Hypothesis (H_0)

There is no effect of using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on students' reading comprehension at 8th grade of SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

2. Alternative Hypothesis (H_a)

There is an effect of using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on students' reading comprehension at 8th grade of SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

If the test results show a p-value equal to or greater than 0.05, then the null hypothesis (H_0) is accepted and the alternative hypothesis (H_a) is rejected, which means there is no significant effect of using STAD on the reading comprehension of 8th-grade students at SMP N 9 Purwokerto. On the other hand, if the result is less than 0.05, then H_0 is rejected and H_a is accepted, indicating that there is a significant effect of using STAD on the reading comprehension of students at SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

CHAPTER III

METHODOLOGY

The procedure for addressing the research questions is explained in this chapter. It contains type of the research, time and place, population and sample, variables of the research, collecting data and data analysis.

A. Type of The Research

This research uses quantitative methods, using a quasi-experimental study as the research design. Quantitative research is a research approach that focuses on collecting and analyzing numerical data to understand certain phenomena. According to Creswell (2019), quantitative research is an approach to testing objective theories by examining the relationships between variables. These variables, in turn, can be measured, usually with instruments, so that numerical data can be analyzed using statistical procedures.

In order to see the comparison of the effect of a treatment with another treatment, experimental research is used. In experimental studies, two groups are usually conducted: an experimental group and a control group (Taniredja & Mustafidah, 2012). In conclusion, quantitative research is characterised by the use of numerical data, statistical analysis, and hypothesis testing to explain phenomena or seek relationships between variables. This research method is appropriate for this research because the purpose of this research is to measure whether the use of Student Achievement Division (STAD) is effective to teach reading comprehension in class. The quasi-experimental design is describe in the following table:

Table 3.1 Experimental Research Design

| Class | Pre Test | Treatment | Post Test |
|-------|-----------------|-----------|-----------------|
| F | O _{F1} | X | O _{F2} |
| C | O _{C1} | - | O _{C2} |

F : Experimental class

C : Control class

O_{F1} : Pre-test experimental class

O_{F2} : Post-test experimental class

O_{C1} : Pre-test control class

O_{C2} : Post-test control class

B. Place and Time of The Research

The place and time in this research are explained as follows:

1. Place of the Research

This research was conducted at SMP Negeri 9 Purwokerto which is located at Jalan Jatisari No.25, Karangmiri, Sumampir, Kec. Purwokerto Utara, Banyumas Regency, Central Java. This school was selected because it is anticipated to provide an answer to the study's research question, which is that students are still having difficulty with reading comprehension. STAD strategy has also never been applied in reading comprehension learning in this school. Moreover, the STAD strategy has never been implemented in reading comprehension instruction at this school. Preliminary research conducted by the researcher on May 17, 2024, at SMPN 9 Purwokerto revealed that the 8th-grade students still struggle with understanding English texts due to a lack of motivation and interest in reading. Therefore, this study focuses on 8th grade as the research subject because it represents a transitional stage from basic learning to more advanced concepts that require deeper understanding.

2. Time of the Research

This quasi-experimental study was conducted from 21 January to 25 February 2025. In 22 January 2025, data was collected by giving a pre-test to the control group and the experimental group. After that, treatment was given to the experimental group using the STAD strategy, while the control group continued learning without the STAD strategy. In 25 February 2025, a post-test was conducted to measure the difference in learning outcomes between the two groups.

Table 3.2 Time of the Research

| No | Class | Meeting | Time |
|----|--------|-------------------------|---|
| 1 | VIII D | Pilot Test for Pre-test | Tuesday, 21 st January 2025. |

| | | | |
|----|--------|--------------------------|---|
| 2 | VIII D | Pilot test for Post Test | Thursday, 23 rd January 2025. |
| 3 | VIII C | Pre test | Wednesday, 22 nd January 2025. |
| 4 | VIII F | Pre test | Wednesday, 22 nd January 2025. |
| 5 | VIII C | Treatment 1 | Wednesday, 5 th February 2025. |
| 6 | VIII F | Treatment 1(Using STAD) | Wednesday, 5 th February 2025. |
| 7 | VIII C | Treatment 2 | Wednesday, 12 th February 2025. |
| 8 | VIII F | Treatment 2 (Using STAD) | Wednesday, 12 th February 2025. |

| 10 | VIII F | Treatment 3 (Using STAD) | Thursday, 13 th February 2025. |
| 11 | VIII C | Treatment 4 | Wednesday, 19 th February 2025. |
| 12 | VIII F | Treatment 4 (Using STAD) | Wednesday, 19 th February 2025. |
| 13 | VIII C | Post test | Tuesday, 25 th February 2025. |
| 14 | VIII F | Post test | Tuesday, 25 th February 2025. |

C. Population and Sample of The Research

The population and sample of the research are explained as follows:

1. Population of the Research

According to Creswell (2019), population in research is defined as a group of individuals or objects that have common characteristics that are the focus of research. Populations can consist of people, objects, or observable events. Creswell (2014), explains that the population is the target of the generalization of research results, so the selection of the right population is important in the research process. Population is a larger group and is the target of the generalization of research results.

Choosing the right population can allow the research to draw valid conclusions that can be applied to a wider group. Grade eight was chosen as the subject because students should be able to understand academic texts at this point in their reading comprehension development. Furthermore, grade 8 is an important transition year for students between elementary school and secondary school, where reading comprehension skills become crucial for academic achievement (Abdullah et al., 2021).

Table 3.3 The Population of the Research

| Class | Population |
|--------------|-------------------|
| 8 A | 35 |
| 8 B | 35 |
| 8 C | 35 |
| 8 D | 35 |
| 8 E | 36 |
| 8 F | 35 |
| 8 G | 36 |
| 8 H | 37 |
| Total | 284 |

Based on table there are eight classes for grade eight at SMP N 9 Purwokerto, with 35 to 37 students in each class. Thus, the population of this study is approximately 284 students.

2. Sample of the Research

The sample in this study was selected using random sampling techniques to determine the sample. This research uses simple random sampling because every member of the population has the same opportunity to be selected (Creswell, 2019). In addition, the division of classes in this school is not based on high and low scores, so each class is divided evenly. The minimum sample size used in quasi-experimental research on the effectiveness of learning strategies is usually 30-50 students per class (Cohen et al., 2022). In this study, a sample of 70 students was taken, 8 F as an experimental class with 35 students and 8 C as a control class with 35 students. In conclusion, in this research took 2 classes randomly using spinners to be used as experimental and control classes.

D. Variables of the research

According to Creswell (2014), variables are characteristics or attributes of individuals, objects, or phenomena that can be measured or observed. In research, variables are used to understand and explain the relationship between the phenomena under study. The two categories of variables used in this research are as follows:

1. Independent variable

According to Creswell (2014), independent variables are variables that influence or cause changes in other variables. Independent variables are variables that influence, modify, or cause the dependent variable to arise. The independent variable is called variable X. In this research, the independent variable is reading instruction using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD).

2. Dependent variable

According to Creswell (2014), dependent variables are variables that are influenced or become the result of independent variables. The dependent variable is the variable that is affected or produced by the independent variable. The dependent variable is called variable Y. In this study, the dependent variable is the reading comprehension of eighth grade students of SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

E. The Techniques of Data Collection

The research uses data that is in accordance with the problem system to obtain more accurate data in this study. Researchers used pre-test and post-test in this study. Tests are data collection tools used to measure the ability, knowledge, or skills of respondents. Tests can be conducted before (pre-test) and after (post-test) treatment is given.

1. Pre-test

According to Sugiyono (2017), the pre-test is an initial measurement (baseline) taken before treatment is given. The pre-test is used to determine the initial condition of the research subject. The pre-test was given before the treatment. The pre-test is used to provide an accurate assessment of students' reading comprehension before the subject receives treatment. The pre-test is focused in the form of multiple-choice questions, consisting of 40 questions based on 7 narrative texts. The allocated time for the pre-test is 60 minutes. Narrative text material was chosen because it is in accordance with reading learning in grade 8 in the second semester. This activity was carried out on January 22, 2025. The control class (8 C) was held at 09.15 to 10.15 while the experimental class (8F) was held at 12.40 to 13.20.

2. Treatment

Treatment was conducted after the pre-test was administrated. The treatment will be conducted four times, the experimental class is taught using the STAD strategy to determine the effectiveness of students' reading comprehension. Meanwhile, the control group was taught without using the STAD strategy. The first meeting focused on the meaning, type and structure of narrative text. The second meeting discussed how to identify the main idea or topic and detailed information in the narrative text. The third meeting focused on language features such as finding the meaning of vocabulary context and pronouns in narrative text. The fourth meeting learns how to make inferences, look for implied information and conclude the moral value in the narrative text.

3. Post-Test

The post-test aims to measure changes or differences that occur in the group after being given treatment or intervention (Creswell, 2014). The post-test is given to measure students' progress in reading comprehension after they have received the treatment. The post-test was given to the experimental group and the control group after the treatment. The post-test consisted of 40 multiple choice questions with a time allocation of 60 minutes. The questions were derived from seven narrative texts, which were different from those utilized in the pre-test. Furthermore, the questions underwent a validation process, ensuring their relevance to the narrative material. This activity was carried out on February 25, 2025. The experimental class (8 F) was carried out at 07.40 to 08.20. In the control class (8C) was carried out at 09.15 to 10.15.

F. Validity and Reliability of Instrument

In quasi-experimental research, validity and reliability are two aspects that must be considered so that the research results can be trusted and accurate. The research instrument was expertly validated by Prof K.H. Saifuddin Zuhri Purwokerto UIN lecturer as an expert judgement. Furthermore, the pilot test was conducted on students of class VIII D SMP N 9 Purwokerto to determine the validity of the question items. In this study, the development of research instruments in accordance with the aspects and indicators that refer to reading comprehension. The reading comprehension test indicators were adopted from Grabe (2009), as follows:

Table 3.4 Indicators of Pre-test and Post-test Before Pilot Test

| No | Indicators | Total Items | Numbers of Items | |
|----|--|-------------|--|--|
| | | | Pre-test | Post-test |
| 1 | Determining the main idea or topic of the text | 7 | 1, 8, 16, 23, 30, 37, 44 | 1, 8, 15, 21, 28, 36, 48 |
| 2 | Identifying Reference | 8 | 6, 11, 18, 20, 28, 31, 42, 48 | 4, 11, 13, 17, 24, 34, 41, 47 |
| 3 | Finding the Meaning of Vocabulary in Context | 10 | 5, 12, 19, 26, 27, 34, 35, 41, 47, 49 | 5, 12, 18, 25, 32, 33, 39, 40, 45, 46 |
| 4 | Finding Detail and Factual Information | 16 | 2, 3, 9, 10, 13, 14, 17, 21, 24, 25, 32, 33, 38, 39, 45, 46, | 2, 3, 6, 9, 10, 16, 22, 23, 29, 30, 31, 37, 38, 42, 44, 48 |
| 5 | Making Inference | 9 | 4, 7, 15, 22, 29, 36, 40, 43, 50 | 7, 14, 19, 20, 26, 27, 35, 49, 50 |

The results of the pilot test were analyzed from 50 multiple choice questions, invalid and unreliable questions were discarded. The results of valid and reliable questions were distributed for pre-test and post-test in experimental and control classes. The following is an explanation of validity and reliability in this study:

1. Validity Test

Validity is defined as the extent to which a concept is accurately measured in a quantitative study. High validity is very important because it provides assurance that the research results are reliable and relevant for the intended purpose (Fraenkel & Wallen, 2012). Therefore, ensuring validity is a crucial step in quantitative research and its results can be accurately interpreted. The tests analyzed using the formula of product moment correlation technique by Pearson as follow:

$$r_{xy} = \frac{n(\sum xy) - (\sum x)(\sum y)}{\sqrt{(n(\sum x^2) - (\sum x)^2)(n(\sum y^2) - (\sum y)^2)}}$$

Explanation :

r : Coefficient correlation

X : Item score

Y : Total score item

N : Total amount of respondents

Judgement :

If $r_{count} \geq r_{table}$ = Valid

If $r_{count} \leq r_{table}$ = Invalid

There are two main criteria used to determine whether an instrument is valid or not. If the calculated r value is greater than or equal to the r table value, then the measuring instrument is considered valid. However, if the calculated r value is smaller than the r table value, then the instrument is considered invalid.

The results of the pre-test and post-test instrument validity tests that have been carried out using IBM SPSS V 27 are described in the following table:

a. Validity Test by IBM SPSS of Pre-test

Table 3.5 The Result of Pre-test Validity

| Number of Items | Value of R table Df=(n-2) | Value of R Count | Category |

Based on the results of the validity calculation, there are 10 out of 50 questions that are declared invalid. The number of questions that satisfy the validation criteria was 40 questions. After eliminating invalid questions, valid questions were used as a pre-test for the control and experimental classes.

From the results above, there are 10 questions that are not eligible for validity so that the questions are invalid. The valid questions are 40 questions, these questions can be used as a post-test for the control class and experimental class.

2. Reability Test

Reliability is an important concept in research that reflects the extent to which a measuring instrument provides consistent and stable results. According to George and Mallery (2010), reliability can be assessed through several methods, including test-retest reliability, which measures the consistency of results when the same instrument is used at two different times. A high level of reliability indicates that the instrument can be relied upon to produce accurate and consistent data, thereby enhancing the validity of the research findings (Field, 2015). For the reliability test, the Cronbach's Alpha method was used as follows:

$$r_{count} = \left(\frac{k}{k-1} \right) \left(1 - \frac{\sum \sigma_b^2}{\sigma_t^2} \right)$$

Explanation :

r_{count} : instrument reability

k : number of items/ question

$\sum \sigma_b^2$: item variant number

σ_t^2 : total of variants

Judgement :

If the result of Cronbach's Alpha value $\geq 0,60$ = reliable

If the rseult of Cronbach's Alpha value $\leq 0,60$ = unreliable

If the Cronbach's Alpha score reaches 0.60 or more, the instrument is considered reliable. This indicates that the items in the instrument have a good correlation and consistency when tested, so the results can be evaluated. Conversely, if the Cronbach's Alpha value is below 0.60, the instrument is considered unreliable.

The results of the pre-test and post-test instrument reliability are described in the following table:

a. Reliability Test of Pre-test

Table 3.7 The Result of Reliability Test (Pre-test)

| Reliability Statistics | |
|------------------------|------------|
| Cronbach's Alpha | N of Items |
| .952 | 50 |

The results of the analysis using Cronbach's Alpha showed a reliability value of 0.952. This shows that the pre-test question instrument has a very strong internal consistency. With a value above 0.6, it can be concluded that the multiple choice items in the pre-test instrument have good accuracy and stability to measure students' reading comprehension.

b. Reliability Test of Post-test

Table 3.8 The Result of Reliability Test (Post-test)

| Reliability Statistics | |
|------------------------|------------|
| Cronbach's Alpha | N of Items |
| .931 | 50 |

Based on the table above, the Cronbach's Alpha result is 0.931. With the reliability test criteria >0.6 , the calculation results are classified as reliable. It can be concluded that this post-test instrument is reliable and can be used in research to measure students' reading comprehension.

G. The Techniques of Data analysis

After conducting the pre-test, then treatment, and post-test, the next step is to analyse the data. Before being given treatment, students are given a pre-test to measure students' reading comprehension ability. After giving treatment, a post-test was given to students to determine students' reading comprehension skills. This test is used to determine the results of students' reading comprehension before and after treatment. In the next stage, the pre-test and post-test data were analyzed to determine the effectiveness of the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on students' reading comprehension at 8th grade of SMPN 9 Purwokerto.

1. Normality Test

In quantitative research, normality test is one of the basic assumptions that must be met before conducting further data analysis (Creswell, 2014). The purpose of the normality test is to determine whether or not the study's data set is regularly distributed. Statistical tests used the Kolmogorov-Smirnov and Shapiro-Wilk test with the help of SPSS 27 software with a significant $\alpha = 0.05$.

The criteria for accepting the null hypothesis (H_0) are as follows:

- a. If the Sig. (p-value) in the normality test > 0.05 , then the data is normally distributed and H_0 is accepted.
- b. If the Sig. (p-value) in the normality test < 0.05 , then the data is not normally distributed and H_0 is rejected.

2. Homogeneity Test

Homogeneity testing is carried out to determine whether the data obtained is homogeneous or not (Levine, 2008). The results of the pre-test and post-test is used to determine homogeneity (Field, 2015). If the results of the two tests are the same, then the data is said to be homogeneous. According to the SPSS program, homogeneous data is if the significance level shows 0.000 - 0.05.

The criteria that determine homogeneity are as follows:

- a. If the Sig. (p-value) in the homogeneity test > 0.05 , then the data variance is homogeneous and H_0 is accepted.
- b. If the Sig. (p-value) on the homogeneity test < 0.05 , then the data variance is not homogeneous and H_0 is rejected.

3. Hypothesis Test

Hypothesis test aims to determine changes that occur in students' pre-test and post-test scores between two groups, a hypothesis test is conducted if the assumptions of normality and homogeneity are met (Field, 2015). The statistical analysis test used to test the hypothesis in this study is the t-test. Data were analysed using the t-test formula, as follows:

$$\frac{M_1 - M_2}{\sqrt{\left[\frac{dX^2 + dY^2}{N_x + N_y - 2} \right] \left[\frac{1}{N_x} + \frac{1}{N_y} \right]}}$$

t = total score

M_x = means of the experimental group

M_y = means of the control group

N_x = number of students in the experimental group

N_y = number of students in the control group

D_x = standard deviation of the experimental group

D_y = standard deviation of the control group

CHAPTER IV

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION

The findings and discussion of this study are explained in this chapter.

A. Findings

1. Data Description

This research was conducted at SMP N 9 Purwokerto in the academic year 2024/2025 and used a quasi-experimental design. The purpose of this study was to see the effect of using STAD strategy on students' reading comprehension. The pre-test was given to measure students' reading comprehension ability before treatment. After the treatment, students were given a post-test to see if there was a difference from the previous test results. The results of the comparison between the pre-test and post-test helped to determine whether the strategy used had an impact on students' reading comprehension.

The participants in this study were 8th grade students of SMP N 9 Purwokerto and used random sampling techniques to determine the sample. Class 8 F was used as an experimental class with 35 students. Class 8 C was used as the control class with 35 students. To measure the effectiveness of STAD, the pre-test and post-test data of the two classes were compared. The experimental class was taught using STAD, while the control class was taught without using STAD. The aim was to find out whether students who were taught using STAD as a learning strategy performed more effectively than students who were not taught with STAD.

The pre-test and post-test instruments consist of 40 questions that have met the validity criteria. The processing time for the questions is 60 minutes. The pre-test was given to the experimental and control classes to measure students' reading comprehension before being given treatment. The treatment using STAD was only carried out in the experimental class. Furthermore, the post-test was given to the experimental and control classes to see the difference.

To analyze the results of pre-test and post-test data, IMB SPSS V 27 was used. Paired sample t test was used to test the effect of using STAD strategy on students' reading comprehension. Furthermore, independent sample t test was used to see the comparison between the experimental class and the control class.

2. Treatment Description

In this study, the treatment was conducted in four meetings with narrative text material. Learning using STAD was conducted in the experimental class, while the control class was conducted without STAD. The treatment was conducted from January 22, 2025 to February 19, 2025.

a. Experimental Class

The experimental class was given a pre-test on Wednesday, January 22, 2025. Class VIII F as the experimental class was treated using STAD with narrative text material. The learning activities carried out in the experimental class are described as follows:

1) First Meeting

The first meeting was held on Wednesday, 5th February 2025. In this meeting, students were initially informed about the principles of STAD type learning that will be used in several meetings. Then the researcher gave an explanation of the narrative text material. Students were divided into groups of 4-5 students. Students were given time to discuss the type, purpose, and structure of narrative text. After discussing, students were given Quiz 1 which was done individually. In this quiz, students are asked to identify various information in the narrative text. The difficulty encountered at the first meeting was that there was one child who still had difficulty learning in groups. Then the time available was only enough to do quiz 1 by the students so the teacher had to correct the students' work.

2) Second Meeting

The second meeting was held on Wednesday, February 12, 2025. In this meeting, the researcher explained the main idea and detailed information in narrative text. Students are still learning with their previous groups. Students are given a video about “The Legend of Crying Stone”. Students in groups discuss what information is in the video. After the discussion, one of the groups presented the information they got. Then students are given Quiz 2 which is done individually. This quiz contained questions about the main idea and detailed information from the narrative text. Although done individually, the scores obtained by students will be accumulated with other students in the group. The group with the highest score received appreciation and awards. The second meeting showed some progress in student learning. It was easy for students to learn in groups and there was enough time to implement so that the steps of STAD could be implemented.

3) Third Meeting

The third meeting was held on Thursday, February 13th, 2025. The third meeting learned about language features, unknown vocabulary, and pronouns in narrative text. Members who have understood the material are given the opportunity to explain the material to other members for 15 minutes. Students in groups discussed and worked on the given Quiz 3. In the Quiz 3, students are directed to identify unknown vocabulary and pronouns in narrative texts. Each student is responsible for finding unfamiliar vocabulary and looking for its similarities and antonyms. They also had to identify one pronoun in the narrative text. After completing the task, the group with the highest score will receive appreciation and awards.

4) Last meeting

The last meeting was held on Wednesday, February 19, 2025. The last meeting learned about implicit information and moral values in narrative texts. Students in groups discuss and work on the LKPD given. In the LKPD, students are directed to find implicit information and moral messages in the narrative text. After the discussion, students are given Quiz 4. This quiz contains questions about values in the narrative text. This quiz is in the form of multiple choice of 5 questions. Then calculate the improvement score between quiz 4 and the previous quiz. The last activity is to give awards to groups based on the achievement of the average score in a group.

b. Control Class

Before being given treatment, the control class was given a pre-test on Wednesday, January 22, 2025. Class VIII C as the control class was given learning without using STAD. The learning activities carried out in the control class are described as follows:

1) First Meeting

The first meeting was held on Wednesday, 5th February 2025. The material given was the type, purpose, and structure of narrative text. The lesson begins by observing a narrative text. Learners are directed to identify what is in the narrative text.

2) Second Meeting

The second meeting was held on Wednesday, February 12, 2025. The material studied at this meeting was about how to identify the main idea and detailed/specific information in narrative text. The students were given LKPD which contained several questions about the main idea and detailed/specific information in the narrative text on the worksheet.

3) Third Meeting

The third meeting was held on Thursday, February 13th, 2025. In this meeting, learners learned about language features in narrative text. They also identify unfamiliar words and identify references (pronouns) in narrative text. Students write down some new vocabulary and they look up the meaning using a dictionary.

4) Last Meeting

The last meeting was held on Wednesday, February 19, 2025. In this meeting students learned about the implied information and moral message of narrative text. Students are given several examples of narrative texts and identify the implied information and moral message of the text. Furthermore, students are given LKPD which contains questions about the narrative text material that has been learned from the beginning to the end.

3. The Result Data of Pre-test and Post-test

The results data of the pre-test and post-test of the experimental and control classes are explained as follows:

a. Pre-test and Post-test Data of Experimental Class

The experimental class in this study consisted of 35 students. Class VIII F as the experimental class was taught narrative text using STAD strategy. The results of the pre-test and post-test in the experimental class are described below:

Table 4.1 The score of the Pre-test and Post-test Experimental Class

| No | Students Code | Experimental Class | |
|----|---------------|--------------------|-----------|
| | | Pre-Test | Post-Test |
| 1 | F1 | 60 | 85 |

| Mean | | 47,85 | 75,92 |
| Score Minimum | | 25 | 55 |
| Score Maximum | | 72,5 | 95 |

Table 4.1 shows the experimental class data on pre-test and post-test, the average value of the pre-test of 35 students is 47.85 while the average value of the post-test is 75.92. The lowest score on the pre-test was 25 and the highest score on the pre-test was 72.5. While the post-test score in the experimental class, the lowest score was 55 and the highest score was 95. The data results show that there is a difference in student scores before and after the test. In conclusion, their scores increased after the researchers conducted the treatment by using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) in reading comprehension learning.

b. Pre-test and Post-test Data of Control Class

Class VIII C consisted of 35 students and served as the control class. The control class focused on narrative text but the learning was conducted without using the STAD strategy. The results of the pre-test and post-test of the control class are described below:

Table 4.2 The Scores of Pre-test and Post-test Control Class

| No | Students Code | Control Class | |
|----|---------------|---------------|-----------|
| | | Pre-Test | Post-Test |
| 1 | C1 | 55 | 62,5 |

| 33 | C33 | 60 | 70 |
| 34 | C34 | 37.5 | 60 |
| 35 | C35 | 25 | 45 |
| | Mean | 46,85 | 62,78 |
| | Score Minimum | 25 | 40 |
| | Score Maximum | 75 | 95 |

Table 4.2 shows that the average pre-test score of the 32 control class students was 46,85. Meanwhile, the average post-test score was 62,78. In addition, the data from the pre-test showed the lowest score was 25 and the highest score was 75. Meanwhile, the post-test showed the lowest score was 40 and the highest score was 95. According to the data, student learning outcomes have increased both before and after the test, but they are still greater in the experimental class that was given the Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) technique.

B. Data Analysis

1. Normality Test

This test aims to determine whether the data is normally distributed or not. IBM SPSS v 27 Statistic with Kolmogorov-Smirnov and Shapiro-Wilk method is used in this study with the assumption that the data is normally distributed if the results obtained are more than the significance value, with a significance value of 0.05. The results of the calculation of normality test are as follows:

Table 4.3 The Result of Normality Test

| | | Kolmogorov-Smirnov ^a | | | Shapiro-Wilk | | |
|-------------------|-----------------------------|---------------------------------|----|------|--------------|----|------|
| | | Statistic | df | Sig. | Statistic | df | Sig. |
| Learning Outcomes | Pre-test Control Class | .172 | 35 | .010 | .951 | 35 | .124 |
| | Pre-test Experimental Class | .177 | 35 | .007 | .948 | 35 | .102 |

a. Lilliefors Significance Correction

Based on the table 4.3, the significance value of Shapiro-Wilk test on the Control class pre-test result was 0.124 and the Experiment class pre-test result was 0.102. Based on the decision-making criteria in the Shapiro-Wilk test, the significance value of both is above the significance level of 0.05. This means that H_a is rejected and H_0 is accepted. It can be concluded that the experimental and control class data are normally distributed.

2. Homogeneity Test

The results of the pre-test and post-test is used to determine homogeneity (Field, 2015). If the results of the two tests are the same, then the data is said to be homogeneous. If the obtained result is greater than the significance value, which is set at 0.05, then it is assumed to be homogenous. The following are the outcomes of the homogeneity calculations:

Table 4.4 The Result of Homogeneity Test

| Test of Homogeneity of Variance | | Levene | | | |
|---------------------------------|--------------------------------------|-----------|-----|--------|------|
| | | Statistic | df1 | df2 | Sig. |
| Learning Outcomes | Based on Mean | .118 | 1 | 68 | .732 |
| | Based on Median | .095 | 1 | 68 | .759 |
| | Based on Median and with adjusted df | .095 | 1 | 67.424 | .759 |
| | Based on trimmed mean | .119 | 1 | 68 | .732 |

From the test results above, based on the mean value, a significance value of 0.732 is obtained for the homogeneity test. Based on the median value, a significant value of 0.759 is obtained. Pre-test of control class and experiment class data had significant values greater than 0.05. Based on the obtained results, H_a is rejected and H_0 is accepted. It can be concluded that the pre-test data of the experimental class and the control class are homogeneous or the same in their reading comprehension abilities.

3. Hypothesis Test

The t test can be carried out after knowing whether the data under study is normally distributed or not. In this study, a paired sample t test was conducted to see the average before and after treatment in the same group. Furthermore, an independent sample t test was conducted to see the comparison of the mean scores of the experimental and control classes. The following are the results of the calculation:

a. Paired Sample T-test of Experimental Class

To identify the difference in students' reading comprehension using STAD strategies, a t-test is used between the pre-test and post-test in the experimental group. The table below displays the t-test results for the experimental class's pre-test and post-test:

Table 4.5 Paired Sample Statistic of Experimental Class

| Paired Samples Statistics | | | | | |
|---------------------------|------------------------------|--------|----|----------------|-----------------|
| | | Mean | N | Std. Deviation | Std. Error Mean |
| Pair 1 | Pre-test Experimental Class | 47.857 | 35 | 13.4649 | 2.2760 |
| | Post-test Experimental Class | 75.929 | 35 | 10.8140 | 1.8279 |

Based on the table, the experimental class has an average pre-test score of 47.857 and an average post-test score of 75.929. The N value indicates the total number of participants, and the number is 35 students. The standard deviation was calculated by comparing the pre-test and post-test of the experimental class, which was 13.4649 in the pre-test and 10.8140 in the post-test. It can be concluded that there is a difference in pre-test and post-test scores after treatment.

Table 4.6 Paired Sample Test of Experimental Class

Paired Samples Test

| Paired Differences | T | Df | Sig. (2- |
|--------------------|---|----|----------|
|--------------------|---|----|----------|

| | | Mean | Std. Deviation | Std. Error Mean | 95% Confidence Interval of the Difference | | | | tailed) |
|-----|--------------------------------|-------|----------------|-----------------|---|---------|--------|----|---------|
| | | | | | Lower | Upper | | | |
| Pai | Pre-test | - | 6.5889 | 1.1137 | - | - | - | 34 | .000 |
| r 1 | Experimental Class - Post-test | 28.07 | | | 30.3348 | 25.8081 | 25.205 | | |
| | Experimental Class | 14 | | | | | | | |

According to Table 4.6, the average paired difference is -28.0714. This value shows the difference in average pre-test and post-test scores for the experimental class, as shown in the table above. This could be represented as $(47.857 - 75.929 = -15.9286)$, and the difference runs between -30.3348 and -25.8081 (95% confidence interval for the lower and upper difference). The paired sample test in the experimental class showed $t = -25.205$ with $df = 35$ at a significance level of 0.05. This negative t count occurs because the average pre-test score exceeds the average post-test score. Therefore, $\text{Sig (2-tailed)} = 0.000 < 0.05$. Thus, H_0 is rejected and H_a is accepted. This suggests that there is a significant difference in the experimental group's reading comprehension before and after learning using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD).

b. Paired Sample T-test of Control Class

To identify the difference in students' reading comprehension using conventional strategies, a t -test is used between the pre-test and post-test in the control group. The table below displays the t -test results for the control class's pre-test and post-test:

Table 4.7 Paired Sample Statistic of Control Class

| Paired Samples Statistics | | | |

| Pair 1 | Pre-test Control Class | 46.857 | 35 | 14.0945 | 2.3824 |
| | Post-test Control Class | 62.786 | 35 | 13.6227 | 2.3027 |

Based on the table, the control class has an average pre-test score of 46.857 and an average post-test score of 62.786. The N value indicates the total number of participants, and the number is 35 students. The standard deviation was calculated by comparing the pre-test and post-test of the control class, which was 14.0945 in the pre-test and 13.6227 in the post-test.

Table 4.8 Paired Sample Test of Control Class

| | Class - Post- | 286 | | | 3 | 9 | 51 | | |
| | test Control | | | | | | | | |
| | Class | | | | | | | | |

According to Table 4.10, the average paired difference is -15.9286. This value shows the difference in average pre-test and post-test scores for the control class, as shown in the table above. This could be represented as $(46.857 - 62.786 = -15.9286)$, and the difference runs between -18.1533 and -13.7039 (95% confidence interval for the lower and upper difference). The paired sample test in the control class showed $t = -14.967$ with $df = 35$ at a significance level of 0.05. Therefore, $\text{Sig (2-tailed)} = 0.000 < 0.05$. Thus, H_0 is rejected and H_a is accepted. This suggests that there is a significant difference in the control group's reading comprehension before and after learning using the conventional way.

c. Independent Sample T-test of Pre-test

The independent sample test compares the pre-test scores of the control and experimental classes. The t-test choice is based on a 2-tailed value < 0.05 , which rejects H_0 and accepts H_1 . Here are the calculated results:

Table 4.9 Group Statistic Pre-test Control and Experiment Class

| Group Statistics | | | | | |
|-------------------|-----------------------------|----|--------|----------------|-----------------|
| | Kelas | N | Mean | Std. Deviation | Std. Error Mean |
| Learning Outcomes | Pre-test Control Class | 35 | 46.857 | 14.0945 | 2.3824 |
| | Pre-test Experimental Class | 35 | 47.857 | 13.4649 | 2.2760 |

Table 4.9 shows that the average pre-test score for the control group is 46.857, whereas the average score for the experimental class is 47.857. As a result, the experimental class outperformed the control group in terms of reading comprehension results. N represents the number of data points as 35 students. The standard deviation used to calculate the degree of risk, specifically in the pre-test of the control class group, is 14.0945, whereas the standard deviation in the pre-test of the experimental class group is 13.4969. The average pre-test results across the control and experimental class groups different only slightly. In addition, to determine whether the difference is significant, we must interpret the findings of the independent sample test from the pre-test. The interpretive outcomes are as follows:

Table 4.10 Independent Sample Test of Pre-test

| Independent Samples Test | |
|---|------------------------------|
| Levene's Test for Equality of Variances | t-test for Equality of Means |

| | | F | Sig. | t | Df | Sig. (2- tailed) | Mean Differe nce | Std. Error Differe nce | 95% Confidence Interval of the Difference | |
|----------------------|-----------------------------------|------|------|---------------|------------|------------------------|------------------------|---------------------------------|--|------------|
| | | | | | | | | | Lower | Upper |
| Learning Outcomes | Equal variances assumed | .118 | .732 | - .30 4 | 68 | .762 | - 1.000 0 | 3.294 8 | - 7.574 7 | 5.574 7 |
| | Equal variances not assumed | | | - .30 4 | 67. 858 | .762 | - 1.000 0 | 3.294 8 | - 7.575 0 | 5.575 0 |

Based on the table above, the significance value (2-tailed) is 0.762 which is $0.762 \geq 0.05$ so that H_1 is rejected and otherwise H_0 is accepted. This shows that both sample classes have the same initial ability towards students' reading comprehension skills.

The information above indicates that the experimental and control classes are not significantly different. As a result, it can be concluded that the experimental and control classes have identical initial abilities. Thus, learning using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) can be employed in class VIII F as the experimental class and class VIII C as the control class that does not use STAD.

d. Independent Sample T-test of Post-test

The independent sample T-test compares the post-test scores of the control and experimental classes. The t-test choice is based on a 2-tailed value < 0.05 , which rejects H_0 and accepts H_1 . Here are the calculated results:

Table 4.11 Group Statistic Post-test of Control and Experiment Class

| | | Group Statistics | | | |
|----------------------|----------------------------|------------------|--------|-------------------|--------------------|
| Learning Outcomes | Kelas | N | Mean | Std. Deviation | Std. Error Mean |
| | Post-test Control Class | 35 | 62.786 | 13.6227 | 2.3027 |

| | | | | |
|---------------------------------|----|--------|---------|--------|
| Post-test Experimental Class | 35 | 75.929 | 10.8140 | 1.8279 |
|---------------------------------|----|--------|---------|--------|

According to Table 4.9, the average post-test score for the control group is 62.786, whereas the experimental class has an average score of 75.929. As a result, the experimental class outperformed the control group in terms of reading comprehension scores. N stands for the number of data points, which is 35 students. The standard deviation used to compute the risk level, specifically in the post-test of the control class group, is 13.6227, whereas the post-test of the experimental class group has 10.8140. The average post-test results for the control class group and the experimental class group differ significantly. Furthermore, to establish whether the difference is significant, we must evaluate the pre-test's independent sample t-test results. The interpretive outcomes are as follows:

Table 4.12 Independent Sample Test of Post-test

| Independent Samples Test | | | | | | | | | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------------------------|---|------|------------------------------|-----|------------------------|------------------------|---------------------------------|--|-------|
| | | Levene's Test for Equality of Variances | | t-test for Equality of Means | | | | | | |
| | | F | Sig. | T | Df | Sig. (2- tailed) | Mean Differ ence | Std. Error Differ ence | 95% Confidence Interval of the Difference | |
| | | | | | | | | | Lower | Upper |
| Learning Outcome s | Equal variances assumed | 1.251 | .267 | - | 68 | .000 | - | 2.940 | - | - |
| | | | | 4.4 | | | 13.14 | 0 | 19.00 | 7.276 |
| | | | | 70 | | | 29 | 95 | 2 | |
| | Equal variances not assumed | | | - | 64. | .000 | - | 2.940 | - | - |
| | | | | 4.4 | 671 | | 13.14 | 0 | 19.01 | 7.270 |
| | | | | 70 | | | 29 | | 50 | 8 |

The following are the findings of the independent sample test of the post-test data in the experimental class and the control class, as shown in the above table: F had a value of 1.251. The difference between the experimental and control classes was homogenous, or equal, according to the Sig. of 0.267, which is greater than 0.05. The df value was 68, the t -count was -4.470. $0.000 < 0.05$ is the 2-tailed significance level. The standard error difference was 2.9400, while the mean difference was 13.14. The 95% confidence interval of the lowest and higher difference was -19.0095 to -7.2708.

In conclusion, the significance (2-tailed) obtained is $0.000 < 0.05$, indicating that H_0 is rejected and H_1 is accepted. This means there is a difference between the experimental class using the STAD learning strategy and the control class using conventional learning. It can be stated that the use of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) is effective in improving students' reading comprehension.

C. Discussion

The goal of this study was to determine whether using the STAD technique had a significant impact on the reading comprehension of grade VIII students at SMP Negeri 9 Purwokerto. The method adopted was quasi-experimental. The results were obtained by comparing the difference in reading comprehension between students in class VIII F (the experimental class) with 35 students and in class VIII C (the control class) with 35 students. Data collection strategies included pre-test, treatment, and post-testing. The data analysis technique employed the normality, homogeneity, and hypothesis tests. The hypothesis test in this study included both an independent sample t -test and a paired sample t -test.

The IBM SPSS 27 application was used to perform normality analysis. The significance value of the Shapiro-Wilk test on the control class pre-test results is 0.124, whereas the experimental class pre-test data are 0.102. According to the Shapiro-Wilk test's decision-making criteria, the significance values are both greater than 0.05. This means that H_a is refused, but H_0 is approved. The data for the experimental and control classes can be concluded to be regularly distributed.

A homogeneity test is also required. Based on the average value, a significance value of 0.732 was obtained for the homogeneity test. Based on the median value, a significant value of 0.759 was obtained. Pre-test data have a significant value greater than 0.05. Based on the results obtained, H_a is rejected and H_0 is accepted. It can be concluded that the pre-test data of the experimental class and control class are homogeneous or the same in reading comprehension ability.

The experimental class paired sample test results showed a paired mean difference of -28.0714. This statistic represents the average difference between pre-test and post-test scores for the experimental class. This can be expressed as $(47.857 - 75.929 = -15.9286)$, with the difference ranging from -30.3348 to -25.8081 (95% confidence interval for lower and upper differences). The paired sample test for the experimental class obtained $t = -25.205$ with $df = 35$ at the 0.05 level of significance. This negative t value arises when the average pre-test score exceeds the average post-test score. So, $\text{Sig (2-tailed)} = 0.000 < 0.05$. Thus, H_0 is rejected, while H_a is approved. This negative t value occurs because the average pre-test score is greater than the average post-test score. Therefore, $\text{Sig (2-tailed)} = 0.000 < 0.05$. Therefore, H_0 is rejected and H_a is accepted. The conclusion is that the experimental class's value learning differs between pre-test and post-test.

The paired sample test in the control class yielded an average paired difference of -15.9286. This can be represented as $(46.857 - 62.786 = -15.9286)$, with the difference ranging from -18.1533 to -13.7039 (95% confidence interval for lower and upper differences). The paired sample test on the control class revealed $t = -14.967$ with $df = 35$ at a significance level of 0.05. Thus, $\text{Sig (2-tailed)} = 0.000 < 0.05$. Thus, H_0 is rejected, while H_a is approved. This demonstrates that there is a considerable difference in reading comprehension between pre-test and post-test.

Furthermore, the results showed that the average value of the pre-test in the experimental class was 47.857, while the control class was slightly lower at 46.857, which indicated that there was no significant difference between the two groups before treatment. However, after the treatment, the average value of the post-test in the experimental class increased significantly to 75.925, while the control class only reached 62.875. This significant increase shows that the method applied in the experimental class was effective in improving students' reading comprehension. Supporting these findings, Berzener & Deneme (2021), noted that students in the experimental group made greater progress, highlighting that the STAD method is an effective approach in teaching English as a foreign language. In this regard, the results of this study indicate that the STAD teaching strategy can have a great impact on students' learning outcomes.

The results of the independent sample t-test on the post-test data from both the experimental and control classes revealed a significance (2-tailed) value of 0.000, which is less than 0.05. This indicates that the null hypothesis (H_0) is rejected and the alternative hypothesis (H_a) is accepted, confirming that there is a significant difference between the post-test scores of the experimental and control classes ($H_1: \mu_1 \neq \mu_2$). Specifically, the experimental class demonstrated higher scores than the control class, suggesting that the Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) method positively influences the reading comprehension of eighth-grade students at SMP N 9 Purwokerto. In line with this, Damaik & Handayani (2023), indicated that STAD is an effective teaching strategy in improving student learning outcomes in English as a foreign language. The significant post-test scores in the experimental class further confirmed that the use of STAD provides a more effective learning approach, leading to improved educational outcomes.

In addition, the findings from this study are consistent with several previous studies, which reinforce the effectiveness of the Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) technique in teaching reading comprehension. Chotimah & Rukmini (2017), showed that the use of STAD to teach narrative text significantly improved students' reading comprehension, leading to recommendations for wider application in reading instruction. Similarly, Nurjanah (2022), reported that the STAD method specifically improved reading outcomes for seventh grade students in junior high school, as evidenced by a marked increase in their post-test scores. These studies collectively highlight the potential of the STAD approach to encourage better academic performance in reading, emphasizing the importance of adopting effective teaching strategies to enhance students' learning experience.

In this study, the adoption of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) can increase learning outcomes through entertaining group learning. These results are in line with the theory put forward by Dewi (2020), by placing students as the center of the learning process, the STAD type cooperative model encourages students to compete in understanding the subject matter, practice voicing opinions, practice discipline, and be responsible for both the group and themselves. Furthermore, Ramasari (2020), said that the application of STAD is effective to motivate students to improve their reading skills, increase student interaction with friends, and make the teaching and learning process more interesting and fun. Therefore, the results of this study provide evidence that the STAD method is effective in improving students' reading comprehension skills in various English learning contexts.

In addition, STAD (Student Teams-Achievement Divisions) method not only helps students understand the material more deeply but also develops communication skills and teamwork. As explained by Welianti et al., (2018), in their research, engaging in discussions makes students more cooperative and improves their communication skills. Furthermore, active discussions and group work within the STAD framework strengthen long-term memory and conceptual understanding, positively impacting student learning outcomes. Moreover, this finding aligns with the theory proposed by Perwitasari et al., (2018), that the long-term benefits of using this method include improved academic outcomes, the development of social skills, and the formation of more adaptive and cooperative student characters.

This research also found that the STAD approach creates an interactive and fun learning atmosphere, which encourages students to participate more actively in the learning process. Through increasing students' motivation, STAD not only helps them master the material, but also builds their confidence and greater interest in English. Furthermore, Welianti et al., (2021) corroborated these findings by showing that the application of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) method in learning not only contributed to the improvement of students' academic ability, but also significantly increased their motivation to learn English. Therefore, the results of this study indicate that the use of the STAD method has a broad positive impact, not only on the aspect of academic achievement, but also encourages students to continue learning and developing.

The application of the STAD model in learning, especially in reading comprehension, often faces various difficulties. Time constraints in learning are one of the biggest obstacles and can make group collaboration difficult. This is in line with research by Chotimah & Rukmini (2017), that limited learning time also makes it difficult for students to collaborate effectively. Students with reading difficulties also tend to be less motivated to participate. On the other hand, teachers have difficulty in assessing each student's contribution due to challenges in the assessment process. All these difficulties show that although STAD is a novel approach, successful implementation requires focus and appropriate tactics.

In conclusion, the use of the Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) method significantly affects the reading comprehension of students at SMP N 9 Purwokerto, as supported by the reasons and statistical results discussed. This approach actively involves students in the development of group learning skills, training in expressing opinions, and a sense of personal and collective responsibility. Moreover, teaching reading at SMP N 9 Purwokerto through the STAD method yields positive results, as it employs an innovative approach with meaningful discoveries. This research demonstrates that the study not only contributes to existing literature but also adds significant value to previous research.

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

The conclusion and some recommendations for English teachers, students, and other researchers are explained in this chapter.

A. Conclusion

This study aims to determine the effect of Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) on Reading Comprehension of 8th grade students of SMP N 9 Purwokerto in the academic year 2024/2025. This study used a quasi-experimental method by using an experimental class and a control class. The experimental class (VIII F) with 35 students and the control class (VIII C) with 35 students.

Based on the pre-test and post-test data calculations, the average value on the experimental class pretest was 47.857, while the average value on the posttest was 75.925. The mean value for the control class was 46.857, while the mean value for the post-test was 62.786. The conclusion is that the experimental class scores have a higher increase. In addition, the independent T test shows that the significance (2-tailed) obtained is $0.000 < 0.05$, which indicates that H_0 is rejected and H_a is accepted.

In conclusion, the findings showed a significant increase in scores when Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) was used for reading comprehension learning. The average post-test score of the experimental class which is higher than the average post-test score of the control class shows that learning using Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) is effective in learning reading comprehension in class VIII SMP N 9 Purwokerto.

B. Limitation

The limited implementation time is one of the shortcomings of this study. Learning using the STAD strategy requires a considerable amount of time for its implementation to be more evenly distributed. This study only consisted of four meetings due to the time constraints given by the school. Reading comprehension exercises are still unfamiliar to the students so the learning outcomes are not maximized. Some of these constraints may affect the research data collection. Therefore, the treatment given has not been fully optimized and this study still has less than optimal results.

C. Suggestions

Based on the research that has been conducted, the researcher would like to provide the following advice:

1. For Teacher

In learning reading comprehension, teachers are expected to create interesting learning so that students are motivated to read more in English. Therefore, teachers need to find strategies that can build students' interest in learning. One of the strategies that can be used is Student Team Achievement Division (STAD), this strategy can encourage students to be active and can develop students' reading comprehension.

2. For the School

This research is expected to be one of the reference strategies that can be used in learning. Schools can also apply STAD learning strategies and other strategies that are in accordance with learning objectives. The use of appropriate learning strategies will help students be more active and build fun learning.

3. For Other Researcher

To conduct research in the same field, future researchers should use the Student Team Achievement Division (STAD) technique in other subjects beyond reading comprehension instruction. When conducting comparable research in the future, this study can serve as a reference. The researcher hopes that other researchers will conduct better research and further optimize the use of this learning technique.

Quiz 1

The Rabbit and The Tortoise

Once upon a time in a lush green forest, there lived a speedy rabbit who often boasted about his speed. Tired of the rabbit's bragging, a slow-moving tortoise challenged him to a race. The rabbit laughed at the idea, saying, "You're too slow, Tortoise! There's no way you can beat me!" But the tortoise remained calm and insisted on the race.

On the day of the race, all the animals gathered to watch. The race began, and the rabbit dashed off, leaving the tortoise far behind. Confident in his victory, the rabbit decided to take a nap under a tree. "I have plenty of time," he thought, as he closed his eyes.

Meanwhile, the tortoise kept moving steadily, step by step, and passed the sleeping rabbit. When the rabbit finally woke up, he was shocked to see that the tortoise was near the finish line. He sprinted as fast as he could, but it was too late. The tortoise crossed the finish line first!
